Bing

A good introduction for a report should:

- Present your topic and get the reader interested
- Provide background or summarize existing research
- Position your own approach
- Detail your specific research problem and problem statement
- Give an overview of the paper's structure

To write a good introduction, you can follow these steps:

- Start with a hook that grabs the reader's attention, such as a surprising statistic, a relevant quote, a question, or an anecdote.
- Provide some context and background information on your topic, and explain why it is important and relevant to your audience.
- Narrow down your focus and state your main objective or thesis statement, which summarizes the main argument or claim of your report.
- Explain how you will address your research problem, and what methods, data, and sources you will use.
- Preview the main sections and points of your report, and how they are organized and connected.

Here is an example of a good introduction for a report on the effects of social media on mental health:

> Social media has become an integral part of our lives, especially for young people. According to a recent survey, 95% of teenagers in the US have access to a smartphone, and 45% say they are online almost constantly. While social media can offer many benefits, such as communication, entertainment, and education, it can also pose significant risks to mental health. Studies have shown that excessive social media use can lead to depression, anxiety, loneliness, and low self-esteem .
>
> This report aims to investigate the effects of social media on mental health among young adults, and to identify the factors that influence these effects. The report will use a mixed-methods approach, combining quantitative data from a survey of 200 college students, and qualitative data from interviews with 10 mental health professionals. The report will also review the existing literature on the topic, and compare the findings with the primary data.
>
> The report is divided into four main sections. The first section provides an overview of the literature on social media and mental health, and identifies the main gaps and limitations. The second section presents the methodology and design of the primary research, and explains how the data was collected and analyzed. The third section reports and discusses the results of the data analysis, and answers the research questions. The fourth section concludes the report, and provides some recommendations and implications for future research and practice.

I hope this helps you write a good introduction for your report. Good luck! 😊

: [Writing a Research Paper Introduction | Step-by-Step Guide - Scribbr] : [Teens, Social Media & Technology 2018 | Pew Research Center] : [Association between social media use and depression among U.S. young adults - PubMed] : [Social media use and anxiety in emerging adults - PubMed] : [Social media use and perceived social isolation among young adults in the U.S. - PubMed]